Description :

Prsentation de l'diteurI was prompted to write this book because of the rash of articles in newspapers, and on television, regarding the mistreatment of animals. Most of the stories spoke of mistreatment of dogs and cats, some so brutal; they resulted in the death of the animals. The brutality also extended to horses, elephants, pigs, squirrels, and countless other animals. Why? Why do they do it? I wondered. Do they think animals and birds have no feelings? Or does it make them feel empowered when they see an animal groveling in pain? Perhaps these abusers had never been taught that animals and birds should be treasured, not trashed. I finally concluded that if children, at an early age, were taught to be respectful and loving to animals and birds, life would change for the better for these innocent creatures. This led me to think about writing a childrens book, which would not only deal with the lives of animals, but with the trapping and hunting of wildlife, our intrusion on their land, and the environment. If this book saves only one animal or bird, it will have been worth all the time and effort that went into it.
